MRS. LIZZIE McDUFFIE

Late FDR's Aides Plan To Write Book On Experiences

By S. GRACE BRADLEY

"The day has come when we must get out and do something ourselves and stimulate others, if we are to experience those rights and privileges which are ours to enjoy," stated Mrs. Lizzie McDuffie, who for many years served in the household of the late President and Mrs. Eleanor D. Roosevelt at the White House in Washington.

Mrs. McDuffie, who has returned to her former home and spends most of her time comforting her invalid mother, Mrs. Sarah Stanfield, 103 Randolph Street, and her husband, Irwin H. McDuffie who was the late president's valet until ill health overtook him in 1939, plans to write a book jointly concerning their many and varied experiences.

Having had numerous requests from both races throughout the United States, where both have travelled together on the presidential train and alone, campaigning, many have felt that this couple holds vital information and interesting facts concerning their contacts with and knowledge of experiences of a man, worthy and estimable in the hearts of millions.

MUSE INCIDENTS

The interesting couple sat Saturday musing and reviewing incidents of several administrations and incidents which would remind one of the present crisis, but feeling confident that the previous plans would be carried out and that once again, we would enjoy peace, world peace, both agreed that we have a job on hands in helping to plan for the post-war period.

Speaking of her activities in politics, Mrs. McDuffie, who has officially represented a party, which presented a New Deal for the Negro stated that the time is ripe for us to consider the man, who is to lead the people and not
